

The Colonists' Rationale for Independence: Commentary on the Cultural Decline of Client Nation America; As Goes the Pivot, So Goes the Client Nation

The obvious divine mission of this client nation – the preservation of an environment of freedom for all – and the objective documented by our Founding Fathers – are presently being ignored by the beneficiaries of their noble efforts.

Today, an ungrateful and egocentric people exploit the advantages granted them by the sweat, pain, blood, and lives of their ancestors. They have done nothing to prolong the freedom they enjoy while they do all within their distorted souls to erase it from history.

People today, in order to pacify their every lust, beg and plead for government to bind them anew with the same shackles the Declaration sought to unlock. We are a disordered lot of mindless wimps, led by false prophets who have brought in destructive heresies even denying the Lord who bought them.

The dreaded result is that those who valiantly and courageously seek to uphold freedom are castigated as being out of touch with modern society.

Peddlers of this “modern society” are the self-appointed anointed who have systematically conquered those of us whom they label the unwashed benighted. Their lust for power has been transformed into a lust to control and regulate the lives of the masses that they abhor. The deconstruction of capitalism by means of socialism will transform our society into a totalitarian regime led by an elite and wealthy oligarchy.

In the process, great men who have a true concern for the general welfare of this client nation are made to appear as despots. Their critics are would-be despots themselves, eager to restructure the most successful governmental enterprise ever devised by the minds of men.

Pseudo-intellectual arrogance has seared their consciences and produced vacuous souls. With great pomposity they elevate themselves as learned judges of eminent luminaries such as our Founding Fathers. The latter were guided by doctrine. They sought to offer to the world the best ideas from time-proven applications of previous civilizations.

The Founders were men who had conceptualized freedom and its responsibilities. They acquired their wisdom through much suffering. They were loyal to the Crown but at the same time dedicated to the higher priority of divine leadership.

Should I keep back my opinions at such a time through fear of giving offense I should consider myself guilty of treason toward my country and of an act of disloyalty toward the majesty of Heaven which I revere above all earthly kings.<sup>1</sup>

Those who fomented the idea of independence from Britain did not take their role lightly, debating an entire decade over the advantages and disadvantages of severing the ties that bound them to the Motherland.

In reluctant unison after long and heated debate it was at last determined that, “Conquer we must, when our cause it is just / And this be our motto: ‘In God is our trust!’”<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Lacky, The Proceedings of the Virginia Convention, 11.

<sup>2</sup> Key, “The Star-Spangled Banner,” v. 4, lines 5–6.

We reap the bounty of their fateful decision this very hour. We, the few, the chosen few at this moment in history, must endeavor to freshen the colors of our national painting. The light which guides us must be that of Bible doctrine. The goal we pursue is the peace, the prosperity, and the happiness that comes to a free people who honor God and Christ.

May this be our motivation, our challenge, and our inspiration as members of the royal pivot in the client nation. For as goes the pivot so goes the client nation. With our victory, we will vindicate the efforts, the wisdom, and the sacred honor of our Founding Fathers whose blood runs in our very veins.

By doing so, we will guarantee by divine decree the life, liberty, and happiness of a free people for generations to come.